Development Process and Social Movements in Contemporary India MDSC-8	4	3	1	-	NA	NA

Learning Objectives

This course aims to develop an understanding of the development process in India among the students. It hopes to provide the students with the analytical tools which will help explain the trajectory and signposts in the development process, focussing on the transformations that have occurred to enable redistribution and also paradoxically, new geographies of power and disadvantages. It is for this reason that the course seeks to build a relationship between state practices of development planning and implementation and the demands that come from social groups protesting dispossession and the high costs of social reproduction. The course attempts to trace the centrality of state in developmental planning, the ramifications of liberalisation and globalisation, innovations and strategies deployed to raise revenue and curtail social expenditure, and the relationship between planning, development and social vulnerabilities. It is hoped that the course would generate an understanding of the challenges that are faced in planning for development, the relationship between planning and democracy and the role that social movements play in the formulation of policies incorporate the voices of the people. In this context an understanding of the changes in policies impacting the industrial and agrarian sectors become crucial for understanding the role of the state and social movements.

Learning outcomes

On successful completion of the course, students would be able to:

- Show knowledge of development policies and planning in India since independence
- Understand the development strategies and their impact on industrial economy and agriculture
- Understand the emergence of social movements in response to the development policies adopted by successive governments
- Demonstrate awareness of the different trajectories of specific social movements in India, their demands and successes.
